

What is Preventive Care?

Preventive care is essential to helping your pet live a long, healthy, and happy life. When most people think of preventive care for their pet, they think of vaccines. While vaccinations are very important, there are actually four cornerstones of preventive care which are equally essential. Our Whole Health Plans incorporate all four of these cornerstones:

Exams

At Frontier, an exam is not just a complete physical examination and health assessment, but an opportunity for your veterinarian to assess and appreciate your pet as an individual. No two pets have the exact same lifestyle- this is something that we take the time to understand and use as the basis for our medical recommendations.

Vaccinations

Vaccinations are an easy way to protect your pet from life-threatening illnesses, such as distemper and parvovirus. Other vaccines, like rabies, protect your whole family because diseases like rabies can infect both pets and people.

Parasite Screening

Internal parasites are some of the most easily treatable of potentially serious pet health conditions. Twice-a-year intestinal screens are recommended by the Companion Animal Parasite Council (CAPC) and strongly encouraged by our veterinarians. Preventive routine deworming against parasites such as roundworm, which can be spread to humans, is very important to the health of your entire family.

Diagnostic Testing

Diagnostics like blood and urine tests help to determine if all body systems are functioning as they should, as well as screening for health issues to which your pet's breed may be genetically predisposed. Bloodwork also tests for conditions like early kidney or liver disease. Early detection and treatment can often be the difference between a relatively easy and affordable treatment and a more expensive, and perhaps riskier, intervention later on.
